Abstract: The stakeholders' focus on Corporate Responsibility and Human Rights is increasing over the time, as well as the number of companies including Human Rights topics in their strategic agenda. Companies are required to consider not only their direct impacts, but also those generated through their supply chain activities. For this reason it is very important that companies consider Corporate Responsibility and Human Rights aspects in their supply chain management, in order to manage the related risks and reduce negative impacts (e.g. in terms of compliance or litigation costs).
