From ‘Knowledge’ to ‘Wisdom’. Horizons of Scientific Information to the Public

Abstract: Information to the public about scientific and technological advances is one major concern in Europe today. Fair information processes and scientific citizenship have become keywords in the public discussion. However, how and to what extent public participation in decision about scientific progress can realistically be implemented is still an open question. The paper highlights some of the problems by critically approaching the controversial relationship between science and the law.

Keywords: Scientific information, Scientific citizenship, Right to information.
