Partisanship, but with Moderation: Thinking about Politics between Conflict and “the Common Good”

Abstract: Normative philosophy is showing increasing interest for parties and partisanship. In this brief essay I suggest, however, that these phenomena are hardly compatible with a universal perspective and with the notion of a “common good,” and that the latter may constitute an obstacle for marginalized groups and individuals who fight for equality, justice, and representation.

Keywords: Partisanship, Agonism, Deliberation, Democracy.
