The Misunderstanding of the Victim in a Trial

Abstract: The misunderstanding of the victim in a trial develops when the law doesn't recognize the roles of the dominant person and the dominated one, when the last one reacts to the abuses. When the victim doesn't undergo the coercing relationship, the legal interpretation confuses the existence of the crime. The Pitch's thesis is used as a filter of the trial and its distortions because, individualizing the victim and removing her from the context, the risk is that the law won't be able to recognize even its own rules.

Keywords: Criminal justice, Victim paradigm, Relative justice.
